

Anti-ageing

Technology to the rescue

New treatment methods may help boost collagen and rejuvenate tired, dull skin.

Men and women have long searched for the next big thing that may help us look more youthful.

We'll try anything, it seems; lathering our faces in creams and serums, including some made from snake or bee venom.

State-of-the-art technologies are also readily available to us. Botox injections, laser treatment, peels, collagen stimulators and dermal fillers may help us wind back the clock on the way we look without having to go under the knife.

Some skin specialists even use their clients' own blood as part of their treatment.

As we age, our skin loses collagen, water draw, volume and elasticity and becomes saggy, flat and dull, says GP turned anti-ageing doctor Jeremy Cumpston.

"When skin has lots of collagen and elasticity it's full, it's bouncy, it glows - everyone wants to look like that," he says.

State-of-the-art technologies are readily available to us.

The best way to rejuvenate tired and dull skin, Dr Cumpston says, is to 'stress' it in the same way you would stress muscle to promote growth.

Dr Cumpston's treatment, Ultimate Renewal, uses a combination of lasers, dermal needling and his plasma rich platelet (PRP) method.

"Lasers create pinpoint, microscopic burns in the skin that are fractional," he says.

"The skin goes into stress mode and makes more of itself. You get a massive build-up of collagen which draws water to the skin and gives it its volume and elasticity, and that's what young skin looks like."

Dr Cumpston heads up nine Ageless Clinics based across Sydney and regional NSW, Queensland and Canberra.

The clinics offer a variety of treatments but Dr Cumpston believes his Ultimate Renewal and beauty boost therapies are game changers in the anti-ageing field.

Ultimate Renewal is a 90-minute treatment involving two different laser machines followed by a dermal needling process known as dermastamp.

During the treatment, Dr Cumpston also draws a client's blood and concentrates the platelets for use in the dermastamp and a hyaluronic mask, as well as in a take-home organic-based cream that's applied to the face in the days following treatment.

"Platelets are in some ways the basis of a fountain of youth because without platelets you can't stimulate stem cells to regenerate tissue," he says.

Dr Cumpston says his PRP method results in a higher concentration of platelets being extracted, and claims his bespoke take-home platelet-rich cream is a world-first.

Frustrated at having to throw away unused platelets, he worked out how to mix them with a cream that patients can use at home. And he credits celebrity chef Heston Blumenthal with the idea.

"I was watching him on a cooking show with his liquid nitrogen and I knew that was the answer," Dr Cumpston says.

"So I now mix the organic-based cream with the platelets and I liquid nitrogen-freeze the syringes so the patient can take them home and pull them out of the freezer for use as part of their treatment."

Ultimate Renewal can be followed up a week later with a beauty boost, a treatment that delivers Hyaluronic Acid (HA), antioxidants, lightening agents and pro-collagen factors to the skin through a painless, fast 'gun'.

"It gives the skin that absolute boost and glow," Dr Cumpston says. "To me, an Ultimate Renewal followed by a beauty boost - there's nothing on the market that is going to give the returns in terms of skin lightness, skin tone, skin colour and collagen formation."
